WOMAN OF FASHION.

Margaret is going to be married; did you know? And, having never passed through this experience before in her twenty summers, Margaret is a little worried and uncertain about some seemingly unimportant trifles, but which, she knows full well, will make or mar the wedding, and so she feels a little like Martha at present, "careful and troubled about many things." For, let me tell you, Margaret is not an ultra fashionable damsel, who has etiquette at her finger tips, and knows exactly what to do under any conceivable cir cumstances, and is always perfectly calm and self-contained, no matter what is happening or going to happen. Margaret is only a fair, sweet maiden anxious to have a pretty home wedding that shall not leave too large a vacuum in the paternal pocket.

The first care and perplexity, of course, is the wedding gown. Brocade is expensive and too handsome for the occasion. Soft silk she would dearly love to have, but silk, too, costs too much. So Margaret thinks she'll have lansdowns. It is, indeed, a pretty material, with a sheen to it not unlike silk, and is so wide that it takes comparatively few yards to make even the long train. There are ever so many other pretty white stuffs, but none, I think, prettier than lansdowne.

She'll make the gown in princess style, and the yoke shall be filled in high to the neck-for a bride may not expose her throat-with full diagonal folds of talle. Around the throat a narrow edge of orange blossoms shall be laid, which are to be carried diagonally across the yoke; there will be a loose belt of the blossoms, too, pointed back and front. The sleeves will have a scarcely perceptible puff, and will be edged with orange blossoms also. They will be long, so that only a short glove will be necessary. When royalty was married not long ago without gloves we were assured that the fashion set would be rigidly adhered to. But it has not been so. Such an ugly style has not found favor among Americans, for only one bride in a hundred has hands pretty enough to hang uncovered. The edge of the skirt shall be trimmed with a full muche, as well as the magnificent Wattens back, that starts so parrow and unassuming at the neck, and broadens and lengthens out so impressively in its journey to the floor. The long tulle veil shall be gathered closely together with a bunch of blossoms at the top of the head, failing to the edge of the train.

The prettiest flowers for the bridal bouquet, I was told yesterday by a leading florist, are lilies of the valley or white orchids. A bouquet may occasionally have a touch of pink, but not often. Next month, when brides will be more numerous, the finest varieties of white chrysanthemum will come into play, and nothing can be more beautiful than these. Bridal bouquets are from pretty one: Eirst, there's a biouse or slik in Scotch plaid of pretty warm olors; over this comes the skirt, of real nun's color, a gray camel's hair, with a broad belt that covers a good part of the blouse. The belt, however, is struight all around, not pointed like our summer ones. The sleeves are of the finest silk, and fabrics is now ready with a wide cuff of grey. The cape that goes over has a high standing collar, be pleased to show you with velvet buttons at each side, by which the bright-colored cord which fastens the cape is knotted together. The cape does not meet, it stands apart about three inches, displaying considerable of the pretty blouse. The skirt has six narrow rows of gray braid; the Trousseau gowns-it's a broad subject, and there's such a bewildering mass of materials to choose from, that one hardly knows what to get. So far the season has not settled itself. Instead of some of the new and startling goods quietly sinking out of sight and leaving simply the cream of materials on top, more and more fabrics are constantly appearing. And what with the velvet stripes, the Russian velours, the tucked goods, the dotted and palm-leafed Bedford cords, the new serges, the shot goods, the conturoys and all the rest, our minds have no very clear ideas in them. So that if one put off buying for a few weeks, to see what will actually come out of the fire of observation and criticism unharmed, one will probably fare much better than by purchasing now. But if this be impossible, there is some material that it is safe to count upon. The new shaggy cheviots, for instance, will never be amiss, and a Bedford cord can be relied upon to last for one season at any rate. Serges, too, are always in style, but the serge craze has been so intense all summer that it is a little tiresome now. Still, in new, odd shades, serge will be worn again. Crepons? Yes, with the silk designs running over them, they make up very

We see suggestions of it in the short, full waists, the high skirts coming up over, the ever increasing sleeve, the Wattean folds and variations in our gowns. Some of the bell skirts are being supplanted by gored ones; even the bells are cut differently from what they were, having no seam at the back, but only a bias, bell-shaped piece. In the front the breadths are gored to fit the figure more closely than ever.

A pretty new combination suit has just come from Paris. It is a novelty, for it answers two purposes-that of an afternoon visiting gown and of an evening dress as well. For the velvet yoke it bears and the embroidered lower sleeve can be taken out at will, leaving a remarkably pretty evening dress. The material is soft sea-green duchesse silk, and is combined with much green and delicate gold embroidery, in bands. The front of the skirt hangs separate from the back, and where they stand slightly apart at the sides we can see a band of black velvet. This style of skirt will be very popular this winter. Whether it will reach us so soon one can scarcely say. The front portion of the skirt is bordered, both edge and sides, with pale green and gold embroidery; so is the back portion, but only at the sides, for the small train must needs hang soft at the edge. The corsage is cut empire style, with the bodice slightly gathered under a wide, black velvet belt. Above the bodice two wide embroidered points cross gracefully, and at the neck the pointed black velvet yoke is finished with a high collar. The waist is the same in the back as in the front. The top of the sleeve is a big velvet puff, and beneath the tight embroidered one.

Another pretty gown is made on pale flowered silk, of princess cut. A pretty full chemisette of pale blue talle, cut slightly, pointed back and front, also has short sleeves, scarcely reaching to the elbow, of black velvet. There are two big puffs on the shoulder, and then the sleeve terminates in another big puff which falls over the glove, that comes up. The dress is fastened at the back, and has a ribbon defining the line of the belt, a pretty ruche at the neck, and another where the tulle joins the silk of the gown.

House dresses, morning robes and negligees grew more fanciful daily. They're a luxury in themselves, these dainty things that a woman loves to sit and lounge in, and the lace and folds of them make lovely woman lovelier EVA A. SCHUBERT.

Still Walting.

"Waiting for dead men's shoes" is a sorry occupation. No man can follow it long without losing what little of enterprise and independence he may once have had. But few people are frank enough to admit that they are on that "waiting list."

ORIGIN OF "WHITE CAPS." How This Noted Band of Outlaws Gained

"I suppose there are fewer people in this country who know the origin of the term 'white caps' than there are those who have fallen under the ban of the scoundrels in Indiana and other western states," said Hiram Berry, of New York, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The term did not originate in this country, but its origin dates back near y a century to County Kerry, Ireland. Nearly one hundred years ago, when reland was more populous than at present, and when the people were not so harassed by British misrule, there lived in County Kerry a large and influential family named Whiteesp, who, whenever any of their neighbors became too obstreperous or immoral, waited on them in the night, took them from their bouses and gave them a sound thrashing with a cat-o'-nine-tails as a warning to desist from their wrong doing and evil practices. Similar clans were formed in other sections of Ireland, all of whom were called whitecaps, not white caps, two words, as they are written in this country. The popular impression is that the appellation comes from the form and color of the headdress that the Indiana regulators wear when perpetrating one of their out-rages, but this is a mistake, as the history of the movement proves. The Whitecaps in Ireland were a terror to evil-doers and were of value to the good order of the society of their day, but I don't know that there is need for them in any part of America."

Noble People in Lowly Callings.

It is not in America only that mem bers of noble European families adopt lowly callings to earn their daily bread. According to the Paris Figure, a Princess Galitzen, a member of one of the oldest aristocratic families of Russia, and a relative of Father Galitzen, who came to Pennsylvania about a century ago to do missionary work, is now a stablemaid in a French circus. A Prince Krapotkin, whose family once exercised great influence and power, is now a cab driver in Moscow where his relatives have often been the honored guests of the czar. Prince Soltikoff, the bearer of a name which often figures in Russian history, daily cleans up one of the market halls of St. Petersburg.

EAD AND DO SOME THINKING

The voter cannot cast an intelligent Ballot unless he can appreciate the intricate manipulations of the wheels of government and become conversant to some extent at least with the fundamental facts and theories controlling the various great governmental departments, and he cannot hope to know the character of the chief executive unless he reads an Accurate and Impartial Biography, written and compiled by a Master Litterateur, equal to the difficult task.

Gen. Benjamin Harrison is a candidate for re-election. The Nation demands that the hero who led its armies in the Field, and who for four years has wisely and noblysteered the ship of state shall continue to hold the helm and guide our Nation through the perils of the future as ably as he has through those of the past. He who during the administration has saved the country from a series of threatening dangers, has brought Italy and Chile to the feet of our Republican throne, and made even England yield to American demands in the Behring Sea difficulty, is the man for the people of these United States.

Gen. Lew Wallace, who is known throughout the United States as one of the most intimate personal friends of President Harrison, and as having had a great deal to do with his re-nomination, has written a biography of the President, which reads like a veritable
